

My VMD 105 Portfolio

by Simon Yeh

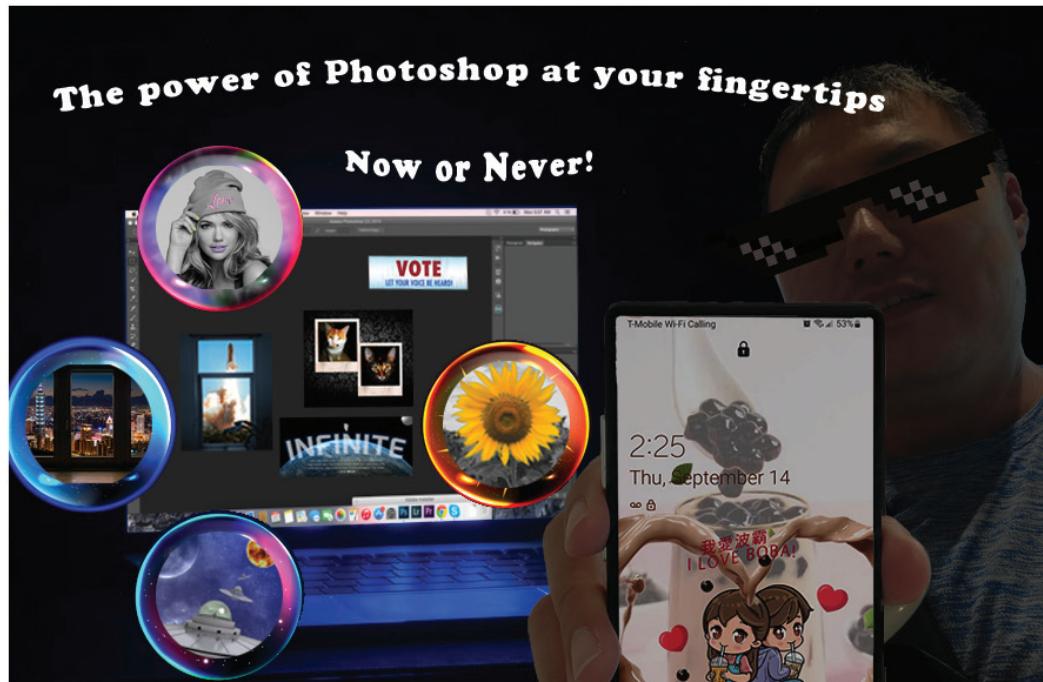

Hey there! I'm Simon Yeh, and I am thrilled to be part of the Digital Skill for Visual Media course at CCSF. My journey in digital media has been a fascinating one full of learnings and explorations. It has helped me deepen my proficiency in tools like Photoshop, Illustrator, Animate, and InDesign. I am aiming to carve out my spot in the field of visual media design.

I am excited about the creative possibilities that lie ahead as I continue with my passion in creating compelling and visually stunning digital content. Feel free to connect with me via email at syeh20@mail.ccsf.edu to discuss all things digital design.

As you check out my portfolio, you'll see the final projects for each part of the course. You might also notice a baby owl popping up on every page—that's my little symbol representing my ongoing journey of learning and my hope in taking my visual media design to new heights. I am excited to share more about this creative ride with you!

Pixel Final Project - The Power of Photoshop

For this project I got to work inside of one of my favorite piece of software and working with digital images. ‘The Power of Photoshop’ was a fun way for me to put all the knowledge and skills I learned into practice and express my creativity. My goal was to create something that reminds me of all the cool stuff I learned and did in this class section. It serves as a reminder for me of the happy moments, frustrating moments but overall, a great sense of accomplishment.

Vector Final Project - Confident Baby Owl

Understanding the differences and contrasting between pixel graphics and vector graphics was the key in the creation of 'Confident Baby Owl'. This project holds a very special place in my heart. It is here that I saw myself as Baby Owl, learning the ways of visual media design. In this new world out, Baby Owl does not shy away; instead, he pushes forward steadily, learning and applying the skills to achieve his dreams.

Motion Final Project - Baby Owl Can

Navigating through the intricacies of animation allowed me to create this motion design project, ‘Baby Owl Can.’ It was rewarding to hear and see Baby Owl fly off to the song ‘I Believe I Can Fly’ by R. Kelly. All of Baby Owl’s efforts and practice pay off as he takes off, soaring to new heights. This animation helps me picture my journey so far and where I will be.
